

If historical culture is the specific and particular way that a society engages with its past, this book aims to situate the professional practice of public history within that framework. It links the increasingly varied practices of memory and history-making such as genealogy, re-enactment, family histories, memoir writing, film-making and facebook histories with the work that professional historians do, both in and out of the academy.

THE SERIES: PUBLIC HISTORY IN INTERNATIONAL PERSPECTIVE

This new book series, edited by Indira Chowdhury and Michael M. Frisch, seeks fresh and insightful scholarly perspectives on international public history, through contextually grounded case or comparative studies that engage an international readership and can shape transnational discourse about the modes, meanings and uses of public history.
